Whereas, Said Panama Realty Company has filed with this board a bond in the penal sum of one thousand (1000) dollars, being the amount fixed by this board conditioned for the payment of all taxes which are at the time of filing said map a lien against said tract, or subdivision, or any part thereof, but not yet payable, which said bond has been and hereby is approved, and

Whereas, Said map does not offer for dedication any highways, streets or lanes, or other part of property covered by said map, and all matters having been done required by law; therefore, be it

Resolved, That said map entitled as aforesaid be, and the same is, approved. But no one of the avenues, drives, streets or lanes, or any parcel of land delineated upon said map be accepted as a public highway or for any public use, and each and all of them are rejected, and the clerk of this board is directed to endorse such rejection upon said map.

The board adjourned at 10:30 a. m., to meet in regular session Monday, October 4th.

DUCK SEASON OPENS OCTOBER 15TH.

A dollar saved is not a dollar gained.
It is more.
Queer arithmetic? No.
The spirit, the sentiment, the inspiration that prompts the saving of the dollar is of infinite value. It means that a thinking-cap has been worn, that stock-taking has been carried out, and that right conclusions have been reached.

GAMBLING AT VILLA MATEO WILL NOT BE PERMITTED

If any attempt is made to open up the Villa Mateo again as a gambling resort, Sheehan says he will raid the place and keep on raiding it.

South City Merchants Are Again Victorious.

The South City Merchants crossed the bay to Sausalito last Sunday and defeated the Travelles team of that place. It was a very rugged game and the Merchants scored runs at will. The final score was 18 to 2, the two runs given as a gift from the Merchants.

L. Belloni played a stellar fielding game, taking four difficult chances without an error, while A. Maderas took the hitting honors. Al had his eye on the ball throughout the game and hit it for five hard raps out of six tries.

Teachers' Institute Meeting in This City This Week

Teachers and school trustees of San Mateo and Mariposa counties were in this city on Monday and Wednesday of this week attending this county's annual teachers' institute in the Royal Theatre.

Roy W. Cloud, superintendent of San Mateo county schools, and John L. Dexter, school superintendent of Mariposa county, presided jointly over the opening session Monday morning.

W. J. Martin of this city delivered an address of welcome in behalf of the municipality.

Sedley C. Peck of the San Mateo high school responded.

R. N. Faulkner of San Mateo was chosen secretary of the institute.

Miss M. A. Trimmingham was elected chairman of the resolutions committee.

George E. Britton was appointed chairman of the reception committee. From 10:20 to 1:30 those attending the institute were entertained by the management of the Western Meat Company at its plant at the water front. The large party also visited the Steiger terra cotta and pottery plant.

During the noon hour, a banquet was served by the Western Meat Company.

At the afternoon session County Superintendent Cloud introduced W. D. Brooks, first county superintendent of San Mateo, who in a few well-chosen words told of his work here in 1856. Mr. Brooks related his experience at Searsville, where he had twenty pupils, and how he used to drive in a spring wagon from Woodside with twenty more boys and girls so that they might have the benefit of his school. As the Woodside district could spare but $25 for six months for the teacher's salary, his plan of uniting the two districts solved the difficulty.

Since 1880 Mr. Brooks has lived in the Hawaiian islands and is now here on a short visit.

Tuesday.

The institute assembled Tuesday in the palace of education at the exposition in San Francisco to inspect the education exhibits of California which have been awarded the grand prize, this state being the only one in the union to secure this coveted award. Exercises were held in the California theatre, Roy W. Cloud, county school superintendent of this county, presiding.

Professor Eugen Neuhaus of the University of California made the principal address. H. K. Bassett, assistant director of congresses, presented commemorative medals to both county institutes.

Wednesday.

The third session of the institute was held on Wednesday.

The program included addresses by Professor George C. Price of Stanford; W. L. Glascock, principal of the San Mateo union high school; D. T. Bateman, superintendent of schools of Santa Clara county, and Otis M. Carrington of Redwood City.

San Mateo was selected as the place where next year's county institute will be held.

TEACHERS GRATEFUL OVER TREATMENT RECEIVED FROM WESTERN MEAT COMPANY

The members of our joint convention of San Mateo and Mariposa school teachers feel heartily grateful to the Western Meat Company for the rare educational treat and reception which was accorded us on Monday last. When our committee received the kind invitation from this large institution, we did not fully realize its educational value, nor did we, for a moment, contemplate such gracious and hospitable treatment as that which we received.

Two hundred and seventy-five of us met at the Royal Theatre in South San Francisco on Monday morning, and were quickly transported by special cars and automobiles to the large packing house.

There we were met by J. O. Snyder, the superintendent, and a number of departmental foremen who had been selected to escort us about the place. After many pleasant introductions to Mr. Snyder and his assistants, the visit began in real earnest. So well perfected were the arrangements that not a moment of time was lost. We were quickly divided up into groups and each group was escorted by an assistant through the various departments. In each department everything was carefully and clearly explained. An excellent opportunity was afforded of viewing the actual processes of manufacture from the crude material to the perfect finished product as it reaches the consumer. We were especially interested in the manufacture of califene, the popular shortening. We saw the ingredients poured into huge kettles and carefully compounded and prepared according to formulas under the eyes of the government inspector. Everything was as clean and spotless as the most scrupulous teacher of domestic science could desire. We then followed its processing as it left the huge kettles, passing through its various stages of manufacture to its finished state, where we finally saw it drawn into the containers in which it reaches the consumer, tightly sealed and cased. Every detail of this process takes place under the watchful eye of the government's sanitary inspecting officer and nothing seems to escape his notice. It certainly is a continuous guarantee of cleanliness and purity in the product.

Thereafter we visited the oleo department, where the oil is separated from the animal fats, and were surprised to note the exacting and painstaking care and cleanliness which is everywhere manifested. In fact, every department though busily engaged in turning out its work and product, presented the neat and clean appearance which any good housekeeper might well feel proud of.

After an hour or more of this educational treat we were conducted to the large improvised banquet rooms, where an excellent luncheon was served to the entire party. It consisted of the following menu:

Potato Salad
(Dressing made with Primrose Salad Oil)
Primrose Boiled Ham Sandwiches
Primrose Boiled Tongue Sandwiches
Hot Primrose Frankfurters
Onions
Radishes
Olives
Sliced Tongue—Primrose Brand
Sliced Ham—Primrose Brand
Chesmino
Manufactured by Manchester Creamery
(Operated by the Western Meat Company)
Cakes
(Made with Califene)
Doughnuts
(Fried in Califene)
Coffee

In addition there were many delicacies on the side not mentioned in the menu.

The cakes which were made with califene were delicious, and received most favorable comment by all present. In fact, the luncheon was most heartily appreciated by us all and was perfect in every detail. At its conclusion Dr. Hicks, the head of the western division of the bureau of animal industry, gave an interesting talk on the absolute assurance which is given the consumers of all products prepared in establishments operating under government inspection. His references to the actual details of manufacture as we had witnessed them proved most conclusively the force and accuracy of his statements.

The memory of our hospitable treatment by the Western Meat Company on this occasion will not soon be forgotten.

After Dr. Hicks' talk we visited the Steiger terra cotta and pottery works, where we spent a very pleasant and instructive half hour, for which we are deeply indebted to them.

BY ONE WHO SAW.

MORE INDUSTRIES MAKE LESS TAXES.

Every additional thousand dollars invested by manufacturers in California either directly reduces your taxes or enables you to enjoy more schools, more roads, more luxuries at the same tax rate.

Do you realize the enormous amount of money paid into the treasuries of cities, counties and the state by the industries of California?

No figures are available at this time to show the total amount, but take, as an example, one single industry—the Southern Pacific Company.

This railroad must be given credit for two things at least—it pays many thousands of dollars each year in taxes, from which we all benefit—and it has helped in building up many of the interior sections of the state.

According to President Sproule of the Southern Pacific Company, in a talk before the members of the home industry league of California the other day at the Palace Hotel in San Francisco, this railroad pays one-fifth of the total money paid into the state treasury, or $3,300,000 annually. Mr. Sproule further stated that this amount was 15 per cent of the net income of the Pacific system.

The Southern Pacific Company is, in reality, a California industry. Of the 40,000 people employed, fully 30,000 live within the borders of the state. And as there are very few railroad men who are not married, the actual number of people depending upon the railroad for support would probably be at least five times this amount.

The Southern Pacific pays for wages, within California, $30,000,000 annually. Material and supplies are purchased in the state to the value of $4,000,000 annually.

If this one railroad pays one-fifth of all the state taxes, think of what a great percentage of the total is paid by all the other industries of the state.

If you would make it a point to buy from your home merchant, he would be forced to carry a larger stock—to do a greater business—and to pay more taxes. This naturally helps you.

If you would buy goods produced in California, where the price and quality are equal, you would make necessary the building of additional factories. And this would mean that these concerns would pay a greater proportion of the total money collected in taxes each year.

If the many millions of dollars sent east each year were to be spent for California-made goods, your tax rate would be so materially reduced that you would wonder why so obvious a thing was not done long before.

Love that flows from the heart cannot be frozen by adversity, as the water that flows from the spring cannot congeal in winter.

COUNTY NOTES

The first step toward the improvement of the creek in the downtown district of Redwood City was taken last Saturday morning when dozens of young boys from the grammar school volunteered their services and began the work of removing all the old tin cans and bottles from the bed of the creek. The debris was piled along the wharf, where it was hauled away in wagons supplied by Superintendent of Streets Dickey.

Judge Buck, who has been at Bartlett springs the past week recuperating from a severe attack of bronchitis, is reported getting along nicely. He will probably remain at the springs until the first of next week.

OVER 500 ELKS ATTEND BIG OYSTER BUST AT SAN MATEO

The annual oyster bust given by San Mateo Lodge, No. 1112, at Coyote Point, Sunday, was attended by over 500 Elks and their friends. The gathering proved one of the most enjoyable in the history of San Mateo lodge.

The famous oyster feed was prepared under the direction of William H. Topeke. The oysters for the feed were grown in the beds in San Francisco bay, just off the San Mateo shore.

In the afternoon the guests enjoyed an unusually attractive and well arranged program, consisting of various vaudeville stunts, the talent being secured from the San Francisco theatres and the exposition.

San Mateo lodge proved itself a splendid host, as it always does, and everybody left Sunday evening feeling that he had had a royal good time.

FRATERNAL ORDERS

(By Harry Edwards.)

No man so poor he cannot help his fellow-men, none so rich but that he owes something to his fellows.

The big work done in capturing new members by the local lodge L. O. O. M. has created a spirit of emulation in all the fraternal orders in South San Francisco.

The captains appointed for promotion work are working hard to obtain twenty or more new members to be admitted within the next thirty days, so that they may know the realities of a defending circle in the local L. O. O. M. lodge, No. 832.

Should they succeed, and the probabilities are in their favor, some fifty or more applications having been received, the Moose will take the lead, so far as numbers are concerned, of any local fraternity.

This get one club is making good.

A little something to eat or smoke does not cost much; it brings out the members, and by so interesting them they are kept interested in the order.

After all, the busy members are the good ones.

One hundred and fifty good, honest, working Moose can make a "best" lodge, while a thousand lukewarm and indifferent Moose couldn't make any more than a "larger" lodge.

The possession of the genuine friendship of real friends, true friends, unprejudiced friends, is a boon that any one in this selfish, unsympathetic world can well value and be proud of. There is pleasure in the real, true friendship of a brother now that nothing human can measure or compute. There is a pleasure that cannot be calculated in the intercourse of friends. It is mutual confidence between two persons, a bond of love, that is strong, indeed, where true friendship exists; there can arise nothing that will mar or destroy their friendship.

Never despair in trouble or care, Be sure my words are true; When inclined to fret pray don't forget— There are many worse off than you.

BURR M'INTOSH IN "COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE"

World Film Corporation presents the five-part photoplay, "Colonel Carter of Cartersville," based upon the novel by the late F. Hopkinson Smith, and produced by the Burr McIntosh Film Corporation.

Burr McIntosh, the well-known actor, is the "Colonel," a young Virginian who gets his title by deeds of gallantry in the civil war. He saves the life of a young unionist officer in the conflict, an incident which has the greatest possible influence on his future fortunes.

Colonel Carter, long after the war, adventures into finance; he tries to float an imaginary railroad on Wall street; is turned down by a cynical financier, Klutchem; quarrels and fights with him, and is put in jail. He is released on the plea of the financier, Klutchem, who is the father of the boy whom Carter saved in the war.

The colonel lives his southern life in New York, attended by a faithful servant, Chad. In the end he becomes rich from a gift of coal land by a southern lady friend, and her daughter marries the New York financier's son.

An excellent production is enriched by some exquisite photography. The acting is very fine, and the direction such as to satisfy the most analytical of modern critics of the silent drama. "Colonel Carter of Cartersville" will be shown at the Royal Theatre on Sunday, October 3d. An unusually strong program will be presented for the balance of the week.

The latest Charles Chaplin comedy, "The Bank," will be shown Monday, also a three-reel feature, "Rods of Wrath," featuring Henry Walthall.

Tuesday a five-part comedy, "Officer 666," which was recently featured at the Portola Theatre in San Francisco, will be shown.

Wednesday is professional tryout night.

On Thursday another Mary Pickford feature in five parts, "Behind the Scenes," will be shown.

The "Romance of Elaine" will be shown Friday.

A five-part feature, "The Man from Mexico," featuring John Barrymore, will be shown Saturday.

STATE TO PUBLISH TEXT BOOKS FOR IMMIGRANTS

The state board of education, co-operating with the state immigration commission, has announced that it will soon publish text books in the study of English and citizenship for adult immigrants. Luther Parker, a federal educational expert recently employed by the immigration commission, is now engaged in compiling these texts under the joint supervision of the two state boards.

These text books will be distributed by the state board of education free, for the use of adult immigrants in all cities and districts where classes for the instruction of foreigners are established under the law regarding evening schools. When the text books have been prepared the immigration commission will send Parker throughout the state to stimulate interest in the organization of such classes. This is part of a recently announced program which has for its object the assimilation of immigrants. This field has been neglected and disorganized in the past and, by means of uniform text books, it is planned to develop a state-wide, organized effort to make real citizens out of the thousands of foreigners in the state.

MEASLES AND WHOOPING-COUGH GREAT FOES OF CHILDREN.

With the opening of the public schools come reports to the California state board of health of cases of health of cases of whooping-cough, measles, scarlet fever and diphtheria. Most people regard scarlet fever and diphtheria with a certain degree of alarm, but measles and whooping-cough are generally regarded as necessities; or, at least, as being of minor importance.

Most fatal cases of these diseases occur in children under five years of age, and parents who deliberately expose their children to cases of measles and whooping-cough, in order that they may "catch them and have them over with," are taking a very great risk. During the first five years of a child's life special care should be taken to protect him from such exposures. By deferring these diseases to later childhood, the death rate may be greatly lowered.

The chief difficulty in the control of these diseases lies in the fact that they are more "catching" in the early stages than later. For this reason, any cough or cold in a child just entering school should be regarded with more or less suspicion, the case should be closely watched, and the child isolated, so that if it proves to be measles or whooping-cough, contact with other children may be prevented.

During 1914, there were 8852 cases of measles reported to the California state board of health, with 150 deaths; and during the same year, 2595 cases of whooping-cough were reported, with 305 deaths. The tragedy does not lie in deaths alone, however, for the complications that often follow are what gives these diseases their deadly character. Some health authorities say that tuberculosis follows measles and whooping-cough more often than any other of the communicable diseases. However this may be, the wise parent exercises every precaution to protect the child from these diseases until as late a period in childhood as may be possible.

The control of these diseases is largely in the hands of parents. Every case should be isolated as soon as recognized and report made to the local health officer.

To admit knowingly a child suffering from either of these diseases to the schools or picture shows or to any public gathering, is a direct offense against all public health regulations.

214,000 PEOPLE KILLED ON RAILROADS IN TWENTY-FIVE YEARS

"In the last twenty-five years approximately 214,000 people have been killed on the railroads of the United States, and of this number 113,480, or over 53 per cent, were trespassers," said R. J. Clancy, assistant to the general manager of the Southern Pacific, speaking before the civic auditorium conference in San Francisco, September 26th.

"Trespassing," he continued, "results in more people being killed so far as railway operation is concerned than from all other causes, yet legislative bodies, state and national, have confined their efforts entirely to safety appliance legislation and have continued to disregard the appeals for trespass legislation made to them by the cemeteries and hospitals of this country every day of every year. A careful review of statistics makes the conclusion irresistible that care in the employment of men and requirement of safe practices, supplemented by trespass legislation effectively administered, will do more to lessen rail casualties than all the safety devices genius has afforded.

"The United States is the only civilized country in the world that has failed to legislate against trespassing, the consequence of which is best illustrated in comparison with similar results in other civilized countries where legislation against trespass obtains and where the casualties incident to trespass are very few in comparison with the United States."

Mr. Clancy called attention to results of observation tests on automobiles, teams and pedestrians at railway crossings and the importance of safety practices in this connection.

"In 1914," he said, "at thirty-four different crossings taken promiscuously to obtain average conditions, out of 16,482 automobiles, 17,755 teams and 54,835 pedestrians, or a total of 89,072, with the number of tracks at such crossings varying at from one to fifteen and the number of trains over such crossings varying from one to 100, 139, or only fifteen hundredths of 1 per cent, stopped and looked in both directions."

Superintendent W. H. Whelan of the Los Angeles division of the company called attention to the Southern Pacific expenditures in safety work.

"The results of the company's activities in this direction are reflected in its accident record," he said. "For the month of June, 1915, for instance, the number of employees injured per 1000 dropped from 8 per cent last year to 6 per cent this year."

The Miser of Havelock

Sally Birch glanced curiously at the house set back among the drooping elms. Her aunt saw the glance and talked volubly.

"You remember I've written you about the man who has taken the old Havelock place?"

"Yes," replied Sally. "You called him an old miser. Really, Aunt Jane, does he count his gold in a dusty, cobwebbed room?"

"Fiddle!" snorted Jane Gray. "Of course he doesn't do that! But he is so stingy he won't give a cent toward any charity, and he even stays away from church. Folks say he is too mean to put a penny in the contribution box."

Sally laughed indulgently. "Poor old man!" she said. "If he really knew what his neighbors said about him do you suppose he would summon pride to his aid and give something?"

"I'm sure he would not," asserted Jane, with emphasis. "He's been approached by every one. I even went there myself!"

"And he refused?" asked Sally.

"Yes. He said, 'Madam, if I could see my way clear to contribute toward your church expenses I would do so, but I cannot afford it.' I said to him: 'Mr. Worth, don't conceal your niggardly nature behind a lie. Any one who can afford to rent the Havelock place must be a rich man.'"

"What did he say then?" questioned Sally.

"He grew very red, and I don't wonder, and he said nothing whatever, for I didn't give him an opportunity. I came away."

Sally glanced once more through the gateway. There was a gardener mowing the velvety lawns. From over the hedge came the rich, sweet smell of lily of the valley.

"When I was a little girl I used to slip inside of the gate and pick lilies of the valley," said Sally reminiscently.

"That was when the Havelocks lived here," interposed Jane. "There have been many changes since you came to visit me fifteen years ago. The Havelocks have become millionaires and rarely come to Lyndbridge. I was surprised to learn they had rented the place."

Sally's blue eyes watched the vanishing form of the gardener. The clatter of the lawn mower died away in the distance.

"You go on, Aunt Jane," said the girl. "I'm going to get some lilies. I shall be home almost as soon as you are," she added as the trim little lady protested. "Even if he is a miser I'm sure old Mr. Worth won't mind my having a few flowers. Probably he doesn't know they're here at all. I'm sure buttercups and dandelions are his favorite blossoms. They're the color of gold, you know."

Sally waved a laughing farewell and slipped through an opening in the tall clipped hedge.

"Oh!" she cried sharply, for a man confronted her.

He was sitting back on his heels among the stiff green leaves of the lily bed, and in his hand was a great bunch of the fragrant flowers.

There was hardly a dainty blossom left in the bed.

He was a very tired looking man, with quite gray hair. His eyes were brown and his eyebrows very black, meeting symmetrically on the bridge of a very handsome nose.

He glanced coolly at Sally, and she was conscious that the brown eyes did not disapprove of her dainty self. Her usually sweet voice became very cold and contemptuous.

"I came in to get a few lilies," she said, as he rose to his tall height. "I am sure Mr. Worth would not care, he has so many."

"My name is Worth," he said, looking keenly at her.

"You?" she cried incredulously. "Then you heard what you were saying about your father, I suppose?"

He nodded. "My father has been dead for three years." A look of pain crossed his features and vanished in a grim smile. "I am James Worth. I am the miser of Havelock."

Sally's face was crimson with embarrassment, but she lifted a haughty chin.

"You listened!" she accused.

"I couldn't help it. These lilies had to be picked. I have promised them by noon. They are for Miss Trent's wedding bouquet. You see, I am explaining why I cannot give them to you."

"Ah, no! But I am glad that you do not mind my trespassing," she said hastily.

"I am afraid I would have objected to your taking my flowers," he said coolly. "You see, I am to be well paid for this bouquet. I could not afford to give them away."

The contemptuous look came back to Sally's eyes.

"Of course not!" She moved toward the open gate; it would be too undignified to squeeze through the hedge again. The situation required a conventional exit.

But fate ordained otherwise. Something crunched under her little white shoes.

"My hat!" he cried tragically.

Sally dashed the tears away and extricated her foot from the ruined hat. She noticed that it was not a new hat, but a Panama head covering of the season before.

Sally had almost reached Aunt Jane's house when she murmured: "How white he was. He must have a frightful temper. And all about a last year's hat!"

But she dismissed the unpleasant incident for the time because Aunt Jane was frantically preparing for dinner.

For several days Sally Birch evinced an unusual restlessness. No longer was she content to sit on the vine-draped piazza and read or embroider. To Jane Gray's disgust Sally took to walking.

"My dear," fussed the little woman, "I can't follow you about the country, over hill and dale, and it really isn't safe for you to go alone."

"I always take Caesar along," protested Sally.

"Caesar is all very well," retorted Jane, patting the French bull pup, "but after this don't go any farther than the pine woods."

Sally agreed, blushing hotly, for how could she explain to Aunt Jane, narrow-minded and prejudiced, that the Havelock pine woods had been the Mecca of her daily walk? Aunt Jane could not be made to understand that Sally felt that she owed James Worth, the "miser of Havelock," an apology for her rudeness.

So Sally and Caesar went to the pine woods once more, and for the first time since that May morning when she had slipped through his hedge she met the "miser of Havelock."

He was standing under the pines listening to the song of a wood thrush. He was bareheaded, and Sally remembered, with a guilty pang, Aunt Jane's idle gossip that the "miser had taken to going bareheaded about the countryside."

He heard Caesar's pattering tread on the pine needles and turned his head just as Sally came to a pause, looking like a lovely picture in her pink frock. The sunlight slanted down and touched her brown hair with golden lights. Her eyes were as blue as the unclouded sky.

"Good afternoon," he said gravely, and without waiting for an exchange of courtesies he looked up to the topmost twig of a pine where the thrush was silhouetted against the sky.

"Mr. Worth," began Sally timidly, "I've been wanting to see you—to tell you I'm sorry about the hat."

His eyes looked so surprised that Sally's heart jumped oddly, just as if he had said: "Why, this girl is much nicer than I thought! She isn't such a barbarian, after all!"

He smiled, too, and ten years vanished. Surely he was not more than thirty. He looked very boyish.

"Pray don't trouble about the wretched hat," he said. "I'm sorry I acted so panic stricken over it, but—he laughed outright—"it was a very serious matter."

"I am sorry. I was very rude about it and about the flowers," she added.

"Would it bore you if I told you why I am called a miser?" He hesitated.

A lovely look came into Sally's eyes. "I would feel honored by your confidence," she said quite humbly.

He found a seat for her on a fallen log, and, sitting down on the pine needles, he stuffed his pipe into his pocket and began.

Sally listened, fascinated, to a story of how a man, his father, had failed in business, in the crash carrying to ruin a number of his customers, men of small means who had trusted him.

Almost immediately he had died, and on his deathbed his son had promised to pay back every creditor and clear his father's name. To him it was a sacred trust, and he had paid up the debts, denying himself luxuries and even necessities. Dick Havelock had been his college chum, and last year Dick had offered his friend the use of his country house, with the privilege of selling fruits and flowers, while he saw that the place was kept in repair.

James Worth was a writer who was struggling toward success. He had just completed a novel, it had been accepted by publishers, and a substantial check was in his pocket.

"I am happy to-day," he concluded frankly. "This check will pay off the last indebtedness against my father's name."

"I am so glad for you," said Sally softly, "and thank you for telling me. I wish every one knew that the 'miser of Havelock' is a nobleman in disguise."

"Oh," he cried, in embarrassment, "I only told you because I—I didn't want you to misunderstand. Any decent chap would have done the same thing."

"You will be going away?" she asked.

He nodded. "To-morrow. Wait a moment, please." He disappeared among the trees.

Sally waited ten minutes, and then he returned, bearing a small bunch of lilies of the valley.

"These have been coming into bloom in the darkest corner under the hedge," he explained. "I was hoping I would see you again. I was saving them for you."

Sally pinned them at her breast.

"I feel so mean about the others," he confessed. "But I got $25 for that bouquet, and it helped a lot. You understand now?"

Sally smiled. "I understand," she said, and gave him her hand in farewell.

"Good luck," she wished him.

"Oh, I shall be coming back to see you!" he said.

"Do you think," Benjamin Harrison once asked Louis T. Michener, his campaign manager, "that I am a cold man?"

"I don't think so," General Michener answered, emphasizing the pronoun, "because I am acquainted with you, but persons do say that I am the only living man who hasn't been chilled by a Harrison cold blast. I understand your habits and your moods, and when you pass me in the street and don't speak to me I know the reason."

"Well," Harrison replied, "I do get into a subject when I am thinking about it and at such times may seem a little blind and distant."

"But Benjamin Harrison," General Michener told the writer of this article, "was not a cold man. No man is cold whom children and dogs love, and all the children and dogs of Indianapolis knew Benjamin Harrison. He saw them always, and they saw him."—New York Sun.

A Timesaver.

"Those envelopes with the glass fronts are great time savers, aren't they?"

"You bet they are. When I get one of them I never have to bother to open it. I know right away it's a bill."

You Might Like to Try It.

To multiply fifteen by itself and the result (225) by itself, and so on until fifteen products have been multiplied by themselves in turn, would take a person writing three figures a minute and working ten hours a day for 300 days in each year, twenty-eight years to accomplish.

"Willie," said the teacher, "you have spelled the word 'rabbit' with two t's. You must leave one of them out."

"All right," said Willie cheerfully; "which one?"

"Me brother is a cook in the navy. O'd have yez know," said the housemaid proudly.

"Oh, moi," said the cook sympathetically; "ain't that turrible? It must be alful t' be a cook where yez can't quit whin yez fale loike it."

"This condiment is so hot I can't eat it."

"Why, my wife said it was chilly sauce."

AMERICANS ARE SAVING CASH

NATIONAL PARKS CONSOLATION FOR THOSE ACCUSTOMED TO SUMMER ABROAD—OUR MILLIONS KEPT AT HOME.

In a recent interview Franklin K. Lane, secretary of the interior, expressed himself as gratified with the public interest in the development of our great national parks. "The number of visitors has been steadily increasing," he said, "but this summer's travel will be far ahead of other seasons. As the magnitude, beauty and healthfulness of the parks are better understood it may be expected that the yearly travel to them will rapidly increase. Thus, the damage caused by the war is being neutralized by inducing Americans to spend money at home. The whole country is the gainer by this intermingling of the people of the east and the west."

Secretary Lane's modest estimate of "at least a hundred million dollars" that Americans are saving to America this year is, indeed, conservative in comparison with the figures compiled by Lockwood Barr, editor of the Wall Street Journal, who finds that the 600,000 Americans who go abroad each normal year spend, in passage money alone, $87,000,000. Most of the steamship lines, of course, are foreign.

"It is quite impossible," he continues, "to get even a fair approximation of the amount of money tourists spend while abroad in hotel bills, railroad, steamboat, and other forms of transportation, gratuities, etc. An estimate by one who comes in contact with a representative part of the regular summer exodus of Americans to Europe places the amount of money spent in this wise at a very conservative minimum of $220,000,000."

"From the earnest sight-seer who has saved up $250 to $300 to lavish on a trip of five to six weeks' duration, to the substantial middle-class traveler who can afford to spend from $800 to $1500, and even $2000, in the course of a six to eight weeks' peripatation on the continent, not one seems to be immune from the temptation to buy."

"And then there is the traveler who approaches the millionaire stage of worldly wealth, who, if those who have a knowledge of the American of this class abroad are to be believed, spend a small fortune for incidental things ranging all the way from clothing to jewelry and minor art objects."

"United States imports of art objects, measured over the past few years, have average about $40,000,000 annually. In what are known as boom years, importations have gone as high as $50,000,000."

"It would be quite impossible to get even a fair estimate of the money spent for such things—as difficult, in fact, as it would be to estimate the expenditures of millionaires who fit themselves and their families out at the fashion centers of Europe, and whose purchases of art and historic objects may measure up to a $100,000 marble portico, or $500,000 for the whole side of an ancient dwelling."

"It is not inconceivable that the class of travelers made up of multi-millionaires alone, if they were particularly extravagant and gratified too many of their whims, might spend in these ways enough to bring up the total easily to the $500,000,000 mark."

"Of course nothing approaching this saving is being spent on American scenery this summer. At least, however, it is being kept in America."

PROPOSED LAW FOR AUTOISTS.

In order to reduce the number of automobile accidents in the state, Michael F. Brown, chief of the San Mateo traffic squad, has announced the details of a new law he will endeavor to have passed by the legislature. Here are some of the features:

Grant no person a license to operate a motor vehicle until ten days after purchase of car.

Make every owner of a car responsible for all damage or injury caused by his machine.

In the case of a death compel the owner of the car causing the fatal injury to pay 75 per cent of the earning capacity of the deceased for a term of ten years.

COUNTY ROADS PRAISED BY SACRAMENTO "UNION"

San Mateo County Leads the State in Good Roads.

The Sacramento Union, one of the most influential newspapers of the Sacramento valley, in a leading editorial of its issue of September 14th, speaks glowingly of the good roads of the county. The article reflects credit upon the board of supervisors who initiated the work and County Surveyor James V. Neuman, the great road builder, who supervised the construction of the road system in the county. The Union says:

"San Mateo county is giving the state a lesson in road building that ought to be taken to heart."

"Some time ago that county voted road bonds for $1,250,000. With the funds thus raised work was begun and that work is now in progress."

"But the supervisors did not suspend their road improvements simply because the people had voted bonds for certain roads which, with the state highway running through the county, will be the nucleus for a great system of permanent roads."

"In the present tax levy they have included a liberal appropriation for the construction of roads to supplement the system which already is well under way."

"Under this method in a few years that county will have a complete road system."

"Under the direct tax plan alone none of the present county supervisors could live long enough to see the roads of the county placed on a proper basis."

"By using the direct tax to build good roads connecting with the bond roads and the state highway, all the needs of the people will soon be met."

"This is the plan the Sacramento good roads association is urging for Sacramento county."

"During the past ten years, outside of the money produced by bond issues of the county and by the state highway bonds, an enormous amount of money has been spent by the taxpayers on roads."

"Ninety-five per cent of this money has gone into unsystematic maintenance of roads which in the nature of things could not be made good."

"Out of more than 1600 miles of roads in this county, if we except the state highway lines and a few miles built under the bond plan, there are not fifty miles of roads in the county that are good summer and winter."

"If we persist in our present methods twenty years from now we will be sure in precisely the same position so far as our roads are concerned."

"Sacramento will do well to heed the example of San Mateo and combine the bond plan and the direct tax system. In no other way will we get good roads in this generation."

AMERICAN BUILDERS' WEEK.

The biggest and most significant industrial pageant ever held in America will pass through the streets of San Francisco this month as a climax of American Builders' Week, to commemorate the rebuilding of San Francisco and the achievement represented by the group of buildings at the exposition—an accomplishment that will contribute more to the progress of building and to the development of architectural taste in America than any other influence."

More than 50,000 builders are coming from every part of the country to take part in the celebration, which will be held on a scale in keeping with the magnitude of the industry itself. From the chief cities of the east, north and south they are coming—the men who made skyscrapers reach 700 feet in the air above New York; who planned and erected the splendid business center of New Orleans; who have lifted the sky-lines of Seattle and Portland up to the Chicago level. They are coming in special trains. They are bringing bands with them—bands, songs and enthusiasm. The New Orleans delegation has announced that it is bringing a new trot—the "Pelican trot."

American Builders' Week first was decided at the convention of the national association of builders' exchanges in Columbus, Ohio, two years ago. Since that time a general committee representing the building industries of San Francisco has been making plans for the big week. And that builders all over the country are "boosting" for the big celebration is indicated in the September issue of the Building Age, the leading building trades paper of the east, which said:

"No such opportunity as American Builders' Week has ever occurred before for promoting harmony among the building trades fraternity of the country, nor could a more appropriate place than San Francisco have been selected."

The pageant, which has been planned as the culminating feature of the week—October 18th-22d—as already organized will be made up of thirty divisions representing every department of the building industry. When all the divisions are completed, it is estimated, the pageant will require six hours to pass a given point.

As now planned the pageant will picture every step in the development of building in America, from the roughly hewn cabin of the frontiersman to the most completely appointed building of to-day. Some of the floats will be prophetic, pointing out the many changes the future is expected to develop. With the pageant nearly a month off, more than forty San Francisco firms are at work building floats.

FOR A SMILE.

In a town of Maryland one Bill Morton appeared before the postmaster one morning, and the following colloquy occurred:

"Morning, Mr. Postmaster."

"Morning, Bill."

"Has Tom Moore been in for his mail yet?"

"No."

"Will you be here when he comes?"

"I guess so."

"Well, when he comes in will you tell him that on his way from the cheese factory I wish he'd stop and get that pig of Herman Stutz's and take it down to Henry Parker's and tell Henry I said he could have it for that single harness even up, if he'll fix that bridle and throw in them russet lines instead of the old black ones; and if he won't trade, tell Tom to bring the pig down to my place and put it in the extra pen, and be sure and shut the door in the hen house, or all the chicken'll get out. Sure there ain't no mail? Morning, Mr. Postmaster."

"Morning, Bill."

It is probable that many queens of the kitchen share the sentiment good-naturedly expressed by a domestic recently taken into the service of a young matron of Chicago.

The youthful assumer of household care was disposed to be a trifle patronizing.

"Now, Lena," she asked earnestly, "are you a good cook?"

"Ya-as'm, I think so," said the girl, with perfect naivete, "if you will not try to help me."

"What's the matter with the strong man?" said the manager half an hour before the curtain was to go up.

"Oh, he sent word he couldn't appear to-day," said the assistant manager.

"What's the matter?" excitedly demanded the manager. "Was he in an accident? That juggling act of his with cannon balls was one of the best things in the show."

"No, he had to help his wife with the dishes last night and he got a lame back."

Uncle Ben, a very careful old dandy, was a witness in a shooting case.

"Were the shots simultaneous, uncle?" inquired the prosecuting attorney.

"Well, boss, you see, hit wuz dis way," replied the witness with great deliberation. "Dem shots come so close together dat I can't be sho' ef dey wuz er not."—Judge.

He had been calling on her twice a week for six months, but had not proposed.

"Ethel," he said, "I—er—am going to ask you an important question."

"Oh, George," she exclaimed, "this is so sudden! Why, I—"

"No, excuse me," he interrupted; "what I want to ask you is this: What date have you and your mother decided upon for our wedding?"

DAVID AND GOLIATH

Did you ever hear of the Gila monster? No. Well, the Gila looks something like a young alligator. When attacked it feigns to be dead. Its bite is frightfully poisonous. The victim lingers a long while in great agony, then dies.

There is—or rather there was—out on the plains west of the Missouri river a human monster as much to be dreaded as the Gila. This was the desperado who finds his prowling grounds in new countries. When America was being occupied by a civilized people the human Gila was the renegade white. He lived with the Indians and fought with them against their enemies, including those of his own color. When the savages wished to draw the whites into an ambush they would use the renegade for the purpose, and he was not ashamed to serve them.

This human monster in another form was the terror of the plains when they were passing from lawlessness to civilization. He delighted in cruelty. There was no law in the country on which he had obtruded himself to prevent his murders or punish him therefor except the revolver, and since that was his especial implement he was so skillful with it that he had every advantage.

Mark Rogers, an Indiana farmer, having a sickly wife, sold his farm and took her with their children to a region in the southwest then being taken up by white settlers. There he "squatted" and raised what crops he could while his wife was regaining her strength. A hamlet grew up in the vicinity, consisting of four dwellings, a store, a blacksmith shop and a saloon. One day Rogers was passing through the hamlet when a man known as Texas Bill came out of the saloon firing his revolver about him as a boy celebrating the Fourth of July. Seeing Rogers, he put a bullet into his left breast, in the region of his heart. He had nothing whatever against Rogers. He fired at him as he would at a tree or any other mark.

His victim fell and lay in the road till some persons took him up and carried him home. There was little or no hope that he would survive, and at his death his invalid widow and her children would be in a destitute condition. He lingered along, however, and one day his wife heard him muttering to himself that when he recovered the man who had shot him would have a chance to shoot him again or die.

This boded no good for the Rogers family. Texas Bill would have every advantage in a fight, and since it was to be expected that if Rogers recovered one of the two would die, every one knew that Bill would be on his watch for the enemy in case he got out again. There were no courts to punish the crime or prevent a subsequent murder. If the husband and father did not die of his wound he would subsequently be killed.

It remained for a weak woman to solve the problem. As soon as she could be spared from attendance on her husband Mrs. Rogers took a bag and went out on the plain. When she returned it was evident that she had something in the bag, but what it was no one knew, and no one cared. She took it into the cellar and left it there, locking the door. Every day after that she would go down into the cellar, take the bag and go into the hamlet, where she would spend some time answering questions as to her husband's condition, but it was noticed that she was always looking about her and had an eye especially on the saloon.

One morning while she was thus engaged Texas Bill came out of the saloon, smoking a long black cigar. His trousers were tucked in his boots, his flannel shirt was open, exposing his hairy breast, and his face was flushed with liquor. A revolver was slung to each hip, and a long knife was in his belt. Mrs. Rogers left her friends and advanced toward him.

There was something about her movement to tell the others that she had some intent concerning her husband's enemy—a certain resolute look in her eye, a quickness in her walk. She seemed like a David advancing to attack Goliath. Was the bag she carried a sling containing a stone?

Texas Bill stood for a moment on the porch of the saloon looking out on the desolate scene, then staggered down the steps and walked away from the group of which Mrs. Rogers had formed a part. She followed him. While doing so she raised the skirt of her dress and from about her waist uncoiled a rope. When she came to within a few yards of Bill she threw a noose in the rope over his shoulders and when it fell to his elbows gave it a sudden jerk, pinioning his arms.

From this moment she moved with lightning-like rapidity, holding the lasso in her left hand, while with her right she turned the bag over on Bill's shoulders. A loathsome thing fastened itself on to his back. Giving a mighty yell, he freed his arms and grasped what clung to him, but it was too late to save himself from its bite. Wrenching it off, he saw the deadly Gila.

Fortunately for the woman he was too intently engaged with the monster to pay any heed to her or he might have served her as he had served her husband. He went howling down the road, and his cries were heard till death relieved him of his agony.

Rogers recovered, and his wife was ever after known as the woman who had beaten Texas Bill.—By Sarah Baxter.

"It's a good thing you had accident insurance, isn't it? That fall must have laid you up for two weeks."

"I know, but it doesn't help me out in this case."

"And why not?"

"Well, it carried a clause forbidding me to engage in any extra hazardous occupation."

"Well, you weren't, were you?"

"Yes; I was trying to sell Jones some life insurance."

"Sir, we are starting a new railroad and we want your daughter to drive the first spike."

"I have no doubt she will consider it an honor to officiate."

"Thank you. We have provided a small gold spike. Also a silver hammer."

"One minute. I don't think she could drive a spike with a hammer. Better provide a hairbrush."
